acquired by conquest and birth, belongs hereditarily to the family of Kamehameha I. The Constitution of 1852, by its ninety-fourth article, left the heir to the Throne free to take an oath to support that Constitution or to decline to do so; and its forty-fifth article reserved to the Sovereign the right to conduct personally, in co-operation with the Kuhina Nui, but without the intervention of a Ministry or the approval of a Legislature, such portions of the public business as he might choose to undertake.

These anomalous provisions appeared to me to need elteration—for such, as I have stated it, was the construction always given during the late reign to those two articles; and that they were also so understood by King Kamehameha III., could be proved by abundant evidence. Indeed, he would not have signed the instrument unless he had been sesured that such was the intent and meaning of the forty-fifth article. By the authority inherent in myself, I called the late Convention to remodel the Constitution, and the powers belonging to such a Convention have never been disputed. On the contrary, this right of revision by such a method had been distinctly referred to by my Predecessor in his speech from the Throne, delivered on the second day of April, 1859. But the Convention, when assembled, was found to contain elements antagonistic to those very ideas of improvement which I had hoped they would have assisted me in carrying out.

On the thirteenth day of August I dissolved that Convention, and on the twentieth day of the same

The debates which were lately had in this place, who are not subject to, or who disregard, parental authority, is very much needed, and a plan for the resulted in much good. The principles upon which the Throne and the political system of this country are based were fully discussed for the first time, and establishment of such an institution will be submitted to you.

In calling a National Convention, I was influenced by a firm conviction of its being necessary that the system under which a people lives should be strictly adapted to its genius and traditions. The Constitution granted by King Kamehameha III., in 1852, had undergone several amendments, and other changes had been proposed but remained in abeyance. That Instrument continued, in many important respects, to want the adaptedness to which I refer. The right to the Throne of this country, originally acquired by conquest and birth, belongs hereditarily tain upon our present system of education. In a matter of such importance to the country, and on which our whole future advancement rests, I trust you will act with that deliberation and due regard to the interests of the mass of the people, without which no systematic and well devised plan can be started and successfully carried out.
